

THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN, WASHINGTON, APRIL 2, 1866.

other hand, that Congress has followed the lead of these crazy Radicals until they have run them into the camp of the enemy—the disunionists. The fact remains—they are separated. My own conclusion is, that Congress, under the lead of these old parliamentarian Radicals, has gone a little too far and too fast, and got away from both the President and the people; that the President has stood still since the day of his election, and has failed to keep pace with the progress of the people.

The President will not go over to the "Cope," nor appoint any of them to office, but will not shake them off, if for their own party or selfish motives they see proper to support his policies and measures. I have no doubt he would be glad to form, out of the moderate and conservative Union men and the better part of the Democrats, a new party. But the testimony of men of the Union party upon whom he has called as to the feasibility of this plan, has been so unimpassioned and so emphatic, that they would not be found in the company of these Copperheads for any consideration, even in a decent place and for a decent object, that the possible fulfillment of this dream—if it ever really existed—has passed away.

The President will use all the power he has, in the way of patronage and influence, to bring men to his support, and will cut off those who are against him. For this he cannot be blamed. A new deal will probably be made in the Cabinet. Secretaries Stanton and Harlan and Attorney General Speed are notoriously opposed to the President. They are inharmonious elements in the Cabinet at this time. Secretary Harlan, it is alleged, is in intimate and daily communication with the Radicals in Congress, and is in substance acting the part of spy and informer upon the measures and movements of the President.

In the new deal, Mr. Seward, Mr. McCulloch, and Mr. Dennison would probably be retained. They are in harmony with the President—stand by and support him as against the Radicals. Stanton, Harlan, Speed, and Mother Welles will probably retire. The latter to her tea and warm corner. I am satisfied that no man can act as mediator in this contest—the man who attempts it will be ground to powder between this advancing glacier, Congress, and this immovable mountain, "the greatest of the Andes."

Had the leaders of the Union party and the Union members of Congress formed in the beginning of Mr. Johnson's Administration a conspiracy with the copperheads and butternuts to drive the President into the ranks of the latter, both parties could not have more earnestly and efficiently moved forward to the accomplishment of that purpose. The former have held aloof from him, distrusted and assailed him. They have aroused his anger, and made him frequently, from passion and his strong, unconquerable, and almost ungovernable combative nature, say, and perhaps do, many hasty and unwise things. The latter have visited him; ministered to his passions and vanities; have given him their confidence and support; have soothed and comforted him when wounded and wronged.

These influences have undoubtedly had their effect. How far these influences, added to the opposition he has encountered from the Union members of Congress in carrying out his plan of reconstruction—or, as he expresses it, "restoration"—will carry the President, no man can tell. One thing is certain. Andrew Johnson will never be found untrue to what he believes to be the interests of his country.

A Bad Result of Right.

The people of New York, says the New York Sun, will this year be more closely packed together than they ever were before. The heavy advance in rents, coupled with the dullness of business, and the danger of a reduction in wages, has caused families to make arrangements for economizing house room. Apartments will now be substituted for whole houses, in many cases, while in others, families that have hitherto used five rooms will be reduced to three, and so on throughout the list. It is doubtful if there were ever before so many parts of houses offered for rent as are now in the market. Rooms, floors, and apartments have taken the places of full houses upon the books of real estate agents, and there is more business done in such rentals than in whole houses. The consequence of this economy of house room will be two-fold. First, it will have a good effect by diminishing the demand for houses and causing a downward tendency for rents; it will have had effect in a sanitary point of view, for scanty house room is detrimental to health. Perhaps the landlords may see the matter in this light before the 1st of May and graduate their scale of rents accordingly.
